Writing Corner

Most forms of writing are organized in paragraphs.

1. Essays begin with an introductory paragraph that presents the main idea of the essay.
2. The main body of an essay may have one or many paragraphs. Each paragraph focuses on and develops a specific topic; there is usually a topic sentence.
3. At the end, there is a conclusion that sums up the main idea of the essay.

The introduction presents the main topic, or thesis, of the essay and gives the reader a basic outline of what is going to be discussed.
*The main body of an essay is composed of several paragraphs which each develop a particular aspect or argument of the main theme.
*The conclusion offers a summary of the main points from the body of *he essay and echoes the thesis from the introduction. It also includes a final statement that signals to the reader that the discussion has ended.

Many of us have days when we are incredibly busy all day, but at the end of the day we feel like we got almost nothing done.

In fact, being busy does not always mean that we are using our time efficiently.

A good way to start your day is to make a list of goals to prioritize your time.

If you don't prioritize your goals, you'll waste time on nonessential tasks and, as a result, you'll feel stressed and frustrated.

Now write a paragraph about where you live and where your friend or relative lives. Compare the two places. Use the information from the chart above.

Here and There

I live in a quiet village. The weather is warm and sunny most of the year. The village is small, and the people are friendly. I know all of my neighbors, and most of my relatives live in the village. My friend, Jamal, lives in a large city. He loves it. But the city is busier and noisier than my village. It's also more expensive to live in Jamal's apartment in the city. And the worst part is that the weather is always cloudier and colder than in my village by the sea.
