The Investigators

While she looked at her detailed notes, interviews, images and videos, Marsha, a private investigator, felt particularly pleased with herself due to the amount of effort they represented. She had been working far more hours than required to make her case against the criminal; now she just needed to figure out who he was – and today was that day. If only we had installed this technology earlier, we wouldn't still be looking for him now, Marsha thought sadly to herself. Meanwhile, she looked at her partner, Jane, and noticed that her head was nodding with sleep. Jane considered it a more valuable use of her time to watch TV programmes than to participate in the task at hand.

Annoyed, Marsha shouted at Jane, "Let's keep working!" while shaking her awake. "We're trying to find him because he's copied our client's identity and is using it as his own. It's suspected that he is guilty of hundreds of cases as well!" She emphasised this point while impatiently tapping her finger on the pile of paper. "He's bold and seems to like to test himself too! It's believed that he is also responsible for the recent data leak, which resulted in the credit card numbers of hundreds of thousands of people being released to the public. If this is the case, he must be a very knowledgeable person who enjoys what he does. I might just be one of the most intelligent individuals we have ever encountered."

Jane yawned, pointing lazily at an icon on the computer, "Using this software to find him is useless." She yawned again, "It is much better to consider your notes carefully than to put your hope in this over-rated technology."

Marsha responded, "Well... I have a feeling this will be among the most valuable technologies that we have ever used. It's cutting-edge and is being used globally for a variety of purposes. For example, if someone had been charged with a crime, an analysis of their face would now be in the database and unique features would be stored for our comparison," she added, hoping to change Jane's mind.

The moment had arrived. This was by far the most awaited moment after many hours. With trembling, sticky hands and a racing heart, Marsha started to type. Her screen had been blank, it quickly transformed with a burst of life. She was pacing up and down with wide eyes fixed on the computer screen, when, out of nowhere, a message flashed on the screen – a red flag. Marsha's eyes narrowed to read the information staring back at her.
