A Lovely Treat

Reem and her sister, Maha, woke up one Saturday morning and they were soon very sad. Their older sister, Aisha, was working, and they were missing her. Reem said to their parents, "I wish Aisha didn't have to work today."

"If Aisha were here, we would be so much more cheerful," complained Maha. "She always creates a nice atmosphere."

"Aisha will be home in a couple of hours," said their father. "I have an idea. Do you remember the holiday we took in Kerala and the lovely restaurants there? Why don't you cook a Keralan dish for Aisha, so we can all have a taste of the time we spent there?"

Reem and Maha agreed that it was a great idea and they started working excitedly. Reem asked their father to go and buy some coconut milk for dessert. Maha had peeled and chopped an organic pumpkin that their neighbour had given them the previous day and ginger that was in the kitchen. She found some curry powder in the cupboard and said that she would go to a shop and buy some sweet potatoes afterwards. They wanted to make a curry dish and the mouth-watering coconut dessert the family had tried in India.

Aisha was very surprised when she came home. She hadn't expected it at all. They enjoyed the curry together. Their parents said that the curry in Kerala might have been less tasty than the dish cooked by Reem and Maha. Finally, the time for dessert came. Aisha took a spoonful of a white pudding with coconut, and it was clear that she didn't like it. She said that they might have not followed the recipe. Reem tasted the dessert too. She was upset and she shouted, "Oh, no! I must have added salt instead of sugar! We passion for food, train for five to ten years, gaining valuable cooking skills, and then open their restaurant. That could be enough to run a food business. However, business skills are also important. Only if you take time to learn about business and your restaurant be profitable.

He passed on his recipes on his family, and it was agreed that he made delicious food. After ten years of working as a chef, both abroad and at home in Dubai, he was mentioned in magazines that he was the best chef of his generation. Yet, he says, "I was young and confident when I started my first restaurant, which was very successful," he told us. "My food is so popular, I thought. The restaurant would be successful. I'd waited and gained some business knowledge. In the end, I had to learn to have a good understanding of business and my new restaurant is successful because of my love of food. "Lots of customers were coming in and spending money. It seemed like it had done well," she says, "but when I checked, I hadn't made enough profit. I'd learned more about business and management before I started. When I spoke to my accountant about the problem, and how it should be improved. Only if I increased my menu. I was cooking a lot of traditional food with expensive ingredients. I also helped reduce costs. I agree that business skills can be learned. However, if you still, I believe, is to enrol in a college course, or you could read books about business. In my opinion, this preparation could be the key to success for
