Sara and Fatima

Sitting alone in her house one morning, Sara stared sadly out of the window thinking about how rarely she sees Fatima these days. Since we don't go to school any longer, I miss her so much and it breaks my heart that we don't talk as much as we used to. Wondering if her friend felt the same way, Sara was on the point of tears when, unexpectedly, Fatima rang. "It's been too long!" said Fatima. "We should spend the day together hiking in the mountains."

"I've never done anything like that before," replied Sara anxiously. "What happens if we get lost? The fact is, I'm afraid of being alone in the mountains."

"Don't worry," said Fatima. "I've lots of experience doing outdoor activities so I'm confident that nothing bad will happen to us!"

The mountain trail that Fatima chose was challenging, and as they climbed higher, it became increasingly steeper. They were at the point of reaching the top when they noticed that the track they had been following had disappeared, leaving the area looking empty and as though no one had been there for years.

"What we'll do is go back to where we last saw the track," said Fatima. Having looked carefully around, Fatima realised that the track they had followed so confidently earlier was nowhere to be seen and they were lost. Exhausted, she sat heavily on the hard, rocky ground and began to cry loudly. "We'll never find the way back down!" she sobbed. "It's all my fault!"

Since Fatima was so upset, Sara suddenly realised that now she had to be the strong one

A New Virus

Dear parents,

Sadly, we must inform you that there is a new strain of stomach virus spreading around school. Yesterday afternoon, when students went home, a whole school meeting was called to decide which action to take. Compared to COVID-19, this virus is not communicated quickly, but unfortunately, we still have had many cases around the school. Having discussed in detail our concerns with our school nurses and doctors after the meeting, we decided to close the school for two weeks. We predict that the decision to close will ensure no one else catches the virus.

Since the medical staff are not completely sure which strain of the virus this is, we as a staff believe it is best to keep all our lessons online until we know more. What you should look out for in your child is, not only stomach aches and neck pain but also a range of extreme feelings such as anxiety and depression. What we advise you to do is, call your local doctor if your child presents any of the above-mentioned symptoms. The difference between a normal stomach ache and this particular virus is quite simple. Unlike a regular stomach ache, the virus is accompanied by a fever.

I'm certain that you are all not only concerned about your child's schoolwork but also their well-being. Having taken this into consideration, we decided it's best for teachers to have online meetings with parents every morning to answer any questions. I'm also sure that you are all extremely concerned about the boy who became seriously ill last week. Having spoken to the doctors in the hospital, it was confirmed, he did not have the stomach virus mentioned above and could potentially have had COVID-19. His symptoms included sneezing, coughing, headaches, mood swings and sore throat, but nothing affected his

Silk Road Exhibit

A new exhibit will exhibit archaeological findings from the Silk Road, an ancient network of trade routes that connected the East and the West. The archaeologists made the findings in a dig in Uzbekistan whose location was kept a secret from outsiders. Led by a team comprising regional specialists and an expert team from the Public University of Delhi, they soon plan to exhibit their discoveries for the first time in Almaty in Kazakhstan.

Merchants played a pivotal role in the ancient Silk Road and the findings indicate that these traders took great care of their health during their long journeys. The texts written by contemporary historians described the scented herbs and spices that not only enhanced the flavours of their food but also acted as natural remedies for a multitude of ailments. In addition, these merchants would interact with other traditional herbal knowledge, such as that encountered by interacting with Chinese medical traders.

The exhibition also sheds light on the unprecedented cultural exchanges that took place along the routes that trade people took. While many traders prospered through exchange of goods, though this prosperity was not shared by all, the discovery of knowledge such the principles of traditional Indian medicine and Greek medicinal practices shaped the health beliefs of communities throughout the region.

One remarkable aspect of this exhibition is the revelation of the surprisingly varied body types of the people who once thrived along the Silk Road. Contrary to popular belief, obesity is just not a modern phenomenon. The archaeologists discovered evidence of obese individuals dating back to this period a thousand years ago. It appears that people had similarly large appetites, and the abundance of exotic and diverse cuisines along the Silk Road may have played a role in contributing to these physical issues.

The archaeologists made the findings in a dig in Uzbekistan whose location was kept a secret from outsiders. Led by a team comprising regional specialists and an expert team from the Public University of Delhi, they soon plan to exhibit their discoveries for the first time in Almaty in Kazakhstan.

Merchants played a pivotal role in the ancient Silk Road and the findings indicate that these traders took great care of their health during their long journeys. The texts written by contemporary historians described the scented herbs and spices that not only enhanced the flavours of their food but also acted as natural remedies for a multitude of ailments. In addition, these merchants would interact with other traditional herbal knowledge, such as that encountered by interacting with Chinese medical traders.

The exhibition also sheds light on the unprecedented cultural exchanges that took place along the routes that trade people took. While many traders prospered through exchange of goods, though this prosperity was not shared by all, the discovery of knowledge such the principles of traditional Indian medicine and Greek medicinal practices shaped the health beliefs of communities throughout the region.

One remarkable aspect of this exhibition is the revelation of the surprisingly varied body types of the people who once thrived along the Silk Road. Contrary to popular belief, obesity is just not a modern phenomenon. The archaeologists discovered evidence of obese individuals dating back to this period a thousand years ago. It appears that people had similarly large appetites, and the abundance of exotic and diverse cuisines along the Silk Road may have played a role in contributing to these physical issues.
