Ollie The Fly

Ollie didn't like being a fly. Flies hung around in shop windows all day, rubbing their legs together. Sometimes, out of boredom, they landed on people's faces. But flies never did anything fun.

People didn't seem to like flies at all. They flicked them away, or sprayed them, or tried to squash them flat with a newspaper.

'I want to be a bee,' thought Ollie. 'Bees make honey and people like bees. And best of all, bees get to sniff flowers all day.'

Ollie decided to try to become a bee. He practised buzzing, but he wasn't loud enough. He visited flowers but he couldn't carry the nectar on his legs. He tried to join a hive but the bees just laughed at him and chased him away.

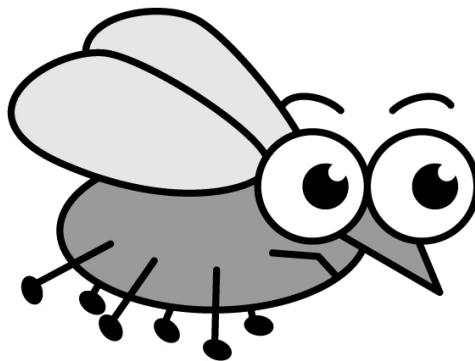

'I'll just have to try harder,' thought Ollie as he buzzed his way into a shop.

Inside the shop a little girl screamed, 'Mummy! Run! It's a bee!'

'It's only a fly,' said the mother. 'A fly can't sting you. You don't have to be afraid of a fly.'

'Hmmm,' thought Ollie, 'maybe it's not so bad being a fly after all.' And suddenly Ollie felt much happier being a fly.

Then one day he saw a beautiful butterfly ...
