Part 4: Inference Question

Finding a job

After years of study, Sarah was finally ready to find a job. She had worked hard to get where she was and was determined to find the perfect position! She searched and applied for many jobs, but nothing seemed to be the right fit.

The more she searched, the less hope she had of finding something. She began to feel like she would never find a job that was right for her.

At this point, Sarah was not sure what to do. She had always been told that if you work hard, you will find success. But after months of searching, she was starting to lose hope.

It was then she met her cousin Bilal, who was a young writer. He told Sarah his story and that changed her perspective. Bilal had been searching for a job for years. He had applied for thousands of jobs, but still couldn't find anything.

But he never gave up. Eventually, he discovered that it all started with his mindset. He was looking for a job that was already 'perfect'; but it was a matter of viewpoint. He decided to change his perspective and look for a good job that he could do perfectly!

Sarah realized that she had been looking at her job search all wrong. She decided to change her own mindset and start looking for a position that she could make perfect! She started to look at each job opportunity to learn and grow. And finally, she found a workplace that was a great fit for her.

Sarah was thrilled to have found a position that was a good match for her. She was excited to start her new career and make a difference!

She understood that if you work hard, don't give up, and most importantly learn along the way, in the end, you will find success.

Write your answer below. Use full sentences.

1-What made Sarah change her perspective about her job search?

Part 4: Inference Question

Sam loved playing soccer more than anything. He spent every afternoon practicing in the park with his friends. Sam dreamed of becoming the best player on his school team, so he practiced dribbling, shooting, and passing for hours. One day, his coach announced that they would have tryouts for the team captain position. Sam was thrilled and decided to give it his best.

On the day of the tryouts, Sam played with all his heart, scoring goals and helping his teammates. However, his friend Max also tried out and did just as well. Sam felt nervous because he really wanted the position, but he also didn't want to hurt Max's feelings.

After practice, the coach called Sam and Max over and told them they had both shown great skills and leadership. So, the coach asked Sam and Max if they would like to share the role of captain together. Sam and Max looked at each other, smiled, and agreed. They realized that working together would make the team even stronger. Sam was happy, not just for himself, but because he could share the honor with a friend.

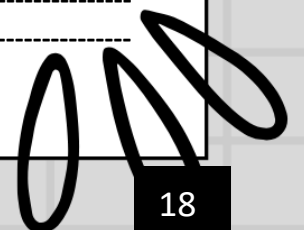

Write your answer below. Use full sentences.

1-According to the text above, what can you infer about Sam's tension?

Part 4: Inference Question

Amira was excited to visit her grandparents in a small village in the UAE. Her family was gathering to celebrate Eid, a special holiday that marks the end of Ramadan. When they arrived, her grandmother welcomed them warmly, offering dates and traditional Arabic coffee, called "gahwa." Amira knew this was an important custom in the UAE, as offering food and drink shows respect and kindness to guests.

Amira loved listening to her grandfather's stories about the UAE's past. He told her about how people used to live in the desert, depending on camels and trading pearls from the sea. Later that evening, they dressed in traditional Emirati clothing for the celebration—Amira wore a beautiful embroidered dress, while her cousins wore "kanduras" and "abayas."

During the feast, her family enjoyed dishes like "harees" and "majboos," traditional foods often prepared during celebrations. After dinner, they exchanged small gifts and shared sweets. Amira was happy to be part of these special traditions and felt proud of her family's culture. She realized that celebrating customs like these helped everyone feel close to each other and their history.

Write your answer below. Use full sentences.

1-According to the text above, what can you infer about sharing stories and traditional foods during celebrations be important for families?
