The Wrong Turn

"What was that?" Hamed asked, looking afraid. Salem took the bright flashlight and checked outside the tent for a while to find out what the noise was. He didn't see anything. Just then, they heard another loud animal sound. It was close.

Afraid, Salem jumped, quickly closed the tent and turned off the flashlight. "We have to get out of here very soon," he said.

"How did we get lost? Didn't we follow the map earlier?" Hamed cried.

"Yes, I think so. We travelled through the small villages and the tall trees, then followed the wide river," Salem said, looking at the map.

Hamed was worried and checked his phone, but there was no mobile service so he couldn't call for help. He could hear nothing but the noise of the wild river, but his eyes were opened wide thinking about the animal.

Just then, Salem cried, "Look at this! We made a wrong turn after the last village we passed!"

"You're right!" said Hamed.

"What should we do now?" asked Salem.

"I think we should take turns sleeping so we can keep watch," Hamed said. "We don't know what made that noise and if it'll be back. In the morning, we have to try and find a road back to the village."

"Good idea," Salem said. "When we get there, we'll ask someone to show us the right way. We mustn't give up!"
