Text

A New Invention

In 2070, Dr. Aleena was exploring Planet X. "My tunnel design has just been completed!" she announced to the other scientists. "I plan to grow delicious food here!" The tunnel would be clear and she had installed a special watering system. "This way, plants will grow, even if the sun doesn't shine or it doesn't rain. What else do you think it needs?"

A scientist suggested, "All plants need fresh air. Why not add holes in the walls?" Dr. Aleena agreed.

"It's a realistic design for Planet X," her boss said. "The environment is extremely dry and cloudy and there are many insects, so a tunnel is an excellent idea." Aleena felt very confident.

After a few months, she was starting to see results. It was time to write her report. As she bent down to look at the plants, she saw it. "Argh," she complained, flicking it off a leaf. "You shouldn't be here!" Suddenly, she felt a sharp pain - something had bitten her! "Ouch! I think it's time to leave!" she said.

When she returned to the spaceship, she handed her boss the report and a few apples she had grown. Her boss read the report with a smile and said, "You're right. This is good. Aleena had felt proud but soon she started realising all her hard work might have gone for nothing. When her boss bit into the fruit, his smile disappeared. He looked at it carefully.
