- How was life in the past in the UAE.?
- What are the characteristics of the culture of your country?
- What are the customs and traditions of the UAE?
- What are the changes and developments that occurred in the UAE in the modern time?

The history of the UAE is a story of great change, from a simple desert life to a modern, successful nation. In the past, life in the UAE was very different from today. Before oil was discovered, people lived in small, traditional villages. Most families were Bedouins, and they lived in tents or simple houses made from palm trees and mud. The main activities for survival were fishing, pearl diving, and trading. Many people worked as sailors or fishermen along the coast, while others traveled across the desert to trade goods with neighboring countries. Life was difficult, and the desert's hot climate and lack of water meant that people had to be resourceful and hardworking to survive.

The culture of the UAE is rich in traditions, with strong influences from Islam and Bedouin customs. Hospitality is very important, and it is common for people to offer dates and coffee to guests. The UAE also has special customs like celebrating Eid and National Day, and traditional activities such as falconry and camel racing, which are still enjoyed today.

Over time, the UAE has changed a lot, especially after the discovery of oil in the 1950s. The country used its oil wealth to build modern cities with amazing infrastructure, healthcare, and education. Today, cities like Dubai and Abu Dhabi are known for their tall skyscrapers, advanced technology, and international businesses. In conclusion, the UAE has grown from a small desert community to a modern country that still honors its traditions while embracing the future.
