A Camp for Everyone

My doctor suggested that I make a lifestyle change. "Your weight is going up fast. Hindi!" he said.

"But I am eating well," I replied.

"I believe it's increasing because you are not trying to be active or moving at all. I recommend you try a local gym. There is one near your home. Hind, I predict that you will have heart problems or maybe even diabetes in five years unless you act now," said the doctor.

I was walking to the supermarket when I spotted a brochure about a new fitness camp in Ras Al Khaimah. It looked amazing.

That evening, I went to the gym that he recommended. It had all kinds of machines. I was introduced to the trainer. He suggested I try the bicycles, running machines and weights. I didn't know how to use any of them but I tried to stay positive. If I just try to come twice a week, I will definitely lose the recommended weight. I thought to myself. All I could think about was the fitness camp so I joined the next morning.

The camp included sports such as karate, cycling, volleyball and tennis. I joined a volleyball session. I believed this was the best way to lose weight. I was getting fitter every day! At the weekends, it was recommended that everyone rest by doing something relaxing such as making jewellery, writing stories or watching camel racing. In my second week, I was shown the indoor gym. It had all kinds of equipment that my trainer helped me use. I can't wait to go back again.

The Titanic

In April 1912, the Titanic set sail from Southampton harbour to New York. It cost almost 8 million dollars to build and it had two sister ships. One, the Olympic, was a little smaller and was built years before the Titanic. The other sister ship, the Britannic, was being built during the Titanic's first expedition. It was designed to be slightly bigger than the Titanic.

On the morning of the expedition, newspaper headlines read 'We're Building the Best Ship on Earth' and 'The Superpower Ship.' A passenger was getting on the ship when a reporter asked him, "What do you think might happen if the ship gets into trouble and there are not many lifeboats?"

"If this happens, I will feel completely safe," replied the passenger. "It was designed with high quality materials. Therefore, I believe the ship cannot sink."

The ship was sailing at high speed across the Atlantic Ocean when suddenly the workers became worried. There was ice everywhere. Soon after, the ship struck ice. After it had crashed, the boat slowed down and everyone heard noises coming from under the ship. People started screaming. One part of the ship was destroyed. Another ship, called Carpathia, was sailing nearby when it received a message which read: "Come at once! We're going down! We're sinking by the head."

"We're coming as quickly as possible," was the reply. By the time Carpathia reached the Titanic, the ship had sunk.

By noon the following morning, the newspapers reported headlines, "1,500 Passengers were Killed by Careless Experts and Experts Predicted Wrong! Today, it is recommended that each ship carrying passengers has enough lifeboats for every person on board."

One, the Olympic, was a little smaller and was built years before the Titanic. The other sister ship, the Britannic, was being built during the Titanic's first expedition. It was designed to be slightly bigger than the Titanic.

On the morning of the expedition, newspaper headlines read 'We're Building the Best Ship on Earth' and 'The Superpower Ship.' A passenger was getting on the ship when a reporter asked him, "What do you think might happen if the ship gets into trouble and there are not many lifeboats?"

"If this happens, I will feel completely safe," replied the passenger. "It was designed with high quality materials. Therefore, I believe the ship cannot sink."

The ship was sailing at high speed across the Atlantic Ocean when suddenly the workers became worried. There was ice everywhere. Soon after, the ship struck ice. After it had crashed, the boat slowed down and everyone heard noises coming from under the ship. People started screaming. One part of the ship was destroyed. Another ship, called Carpathia, was sailing nearby when it received a message which read: "Come at once! We're going down! We're sinking by the head."

"We're coming as quickly as possible," was the reply. By the time Carpathia reached the Titanic, the ship had sunk.

By noon the following morning, the newspapers reported headlines, "1,500 Passengers were Killed by Careless Experts and Experts Predicted Wrong! Today, it is recommended that each ship carrying passengers has enough lifeboats for every person on board."

The Titanic

In April 1912, the Titanic set sail from Southampton harbour to New York. It cost almost 8 million dollars to build and it had two sister ships. One, the Olympic, was a little smaller and was built years before the Titanic. The other sister ship, the Britannic, was being built during the Titanic's first expedition. It was designed to be slightly bigger than the Titanic.

On the morning of the expedition, newspaper headlines read 'We're Building the Best Ship on Earth' and 'The Superpower Ship.' A passenger was getting on the ship when a reporter asked him, "What do you think might happen if the ship gets into trouble and there are not many lifeboats?"

The Paralympic Games

The Paralympic Games were started by Sir Ludwig Guttmann in 1948 for people who had damaged backs. He was hoping to use the games to help disabled people become more sociable and he was intending to help them change their negative feelings about having a disability.

The Paralympic Games now provides a platform for individuals with a variety of disabilities to showcase their abilities and encourage others through their achievements. The games have and will continue to have a positive effect on people's thoughts and challenge the idea that disabled people are ill and weak.

Even if individuals have serious disabilities, they can take part in a variety of different events such cycling, swimming, wheelchair basketball and more. The athletes compete in different groups according to their level of ability. In case the level of disabilities in the groups is challenged by athletes, the organizers are always updating the rules, which they publish online.

Without a doubt, competitors in the Paralympic Games, like the Olympic Games, face many challenges to reach this level of achievement. They need to have sports skills as well as being able to control their thoughts and follow a personal training plan regularly. Many of the athletes suggest that having a personal saying helps them do better. They also recommend taking up their sport as a hobby first, before entering in competitions.

Even if an athlete does not win an event at the Paralympic Games, being able to compete is a special achievement that takes years of hard work. The Paralympic Games always encourage athletes to push themselves, and this will result in new world records being set year after year. Without a doubt, the Games are a celebration of athletes' ability, will power, and being the best.
