Read the following text and answer the questions below:

Is it the right career for me?

I always knew I wanted to be a pilot so as soon as I finished school I started applying to different airlines to join their training courses. I was offered an interview with two different companies. Unfortunately, I was nervous and did badly in the first one! Luckily, I did much better the next time and the company accepted me. There was a lot to learn on the course and it was more stressful than I expected, but I enjoyed it.

After years of training and studying, I'm now qualified as a professional pilot and the job has lots of advantages. The most obvious of these is travelling all over the world. I've been to hundreds of interesting places, and I often stay in some of them for a couple of days between flights. In spite of that, though, there are some negatives. If I'm in an amazing place, there's no one to share it with. Also, if I go to the same place regularly, it gets boring.

My job affects my social life, too. My working days aren't fixed, which means I'm often free during the week when my friends or family are busy at college or work. That's no fun because I have to do stuff on my own! It's not all bad, though, because it does mean that I have the opportunity to develop new interests.

Surprisingly, the lack of routine can have unexpected consequences. It means I have to make a special effort to take care of myself. That's why I eat healthy food and do exercise like running. Organising that can be difficult when I'm travelling so I always make sure any hotel I stay in has a pool or gym.

Do I regret anything? I wish I had more qualifications that are not connected with flying. They would give me opportunities for a new career when I stop flying. Because of that I'm now taking an online business course in my free time but it's hard to fit everything in. I do know I'm lucky, though, and I have a dream job!

Text 2

A Day in the Life of a Businessman

My name is Josh Taylor, and I am project manager at a major construction company based in the U.S.A. I have worked in the U.A.E. for seven years. I am in our Abu Dhabi office, though I actually live in Dubai, as my wife works there.

My work involves running construction projects - designing buildings such as hotels, ordering materials and equipment, and recruiting construction workers. We have just started on a new medical centre, and last year, we constructed a secondary school.

I usually leave the house around 6 am after a quick coffee - I do not bother with breakfast - so I can be in the office and have some time to deal with emails before the phone starts ringing. For every project, I might have to deal with up to six or seven different consultants, and it is my job to make sure that each person in the team has the information they need.

At 12.30 pm, I have lunch. This might be just a sandwich and a cup of coffee in my office if I am really busy, or I may meet the consultant for a new project in a restaurant in town. It is important for me to be clear about the needs of a project before we start it, and it is often easier to get this information from a face-to-face discussion. I do not eat much though, just a salad. In the afternoon, I might have more meetings, or I might have time to sit at my desk and catch up. We have an open plan office, so I can easily speak to other people in the team if I have any questions. It is good to be able to discuss problems with your colleagues, though having an open plan office can occasionally mean it is difficult to concentrate, especially if I have got an urgent deadline.

I leave the office around 5.30 pm and have dinner at home with my wife. We used to go out a lot to eat, but we do not often do that now. Then, I generally spend some time studying; I am working towards a business qualification. After that, we might watch television for a while - especially if there is a good football match or a movie on-before going to bed.
