Tim Greenwood lives in Oakland, USA. He has written about Cambodia, Thailand and India. At the moment he is writing a book about Nepal.

Tim, how did you start travelling?

We never travelled as a family, but when I was a teenager, I saw movies like Lawrence of Arabia, and they made me want to travel and see other countries. I left college at the age of 21 and went to Europe alone. That trip didn't go well- I was too young and didn't know how to look after myself.

How did you start writing?

I've loved writing since I was 10- I've never wanted any other job. At the age of 21, I wrote for my weekly college magazine and then started writing travel stories. At first, none of the travel magazines wanted to buy my stories, but that slowly changed. It took two or three years, I guess.

What do you find difficult about writing?

It is easy to spend all time travelling and then not have time to open my laptop and work! Also, it's hard to get enough money. I'll never stop writing, but in the future, I may have to do extra few hours a week teaching just to pay the bills.

What's the best thing about being a travel writer?

I get letters from young people who've read my books and stories and enjoy my work. I just love to hear from my fans who like my work.
