Lost in the Rocky Mountains

Fifty-four-year-old British scientist Bob Rigsby was lost for five days in Canada's Rocky Mountains.

Bob had been in Vancouver, Canada, giving a talk at a conference on the environment. When he finished, he travelled to the Rocky Mountains. He then went on a short walk to look at the local plant and animal life. After a couple of hours, he realised he had lost his way, but was sure he could easily get back to the hotel.

But, after walking for several hours the next day, it became clear to Bob that he was in danger. He had his mobile phone with him, but the battery was almost dead. Bob carried on walking for three more days. He knew which plants he could safely eat and he had little trouble finding them. When he was thirsty he drank from streams.

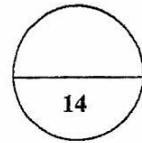

On the fourth day, he reached a forest that he knew he had walked through the previous day. His heart sank. He realised it was hopeless and decided to call his family in England. 'He was very calm when he spoke to me on the phone,' says his wife, Shirley. 'He'd been lost a few times before, but never for so many days - that's why this time was different.'

She immediately contacted the hotel, after a quick call to the Canadian embassy in London to get its phone number. 'We're always worried if our guests are away for a long time,' says McCaffrey, the hotel's owner. 'But that week some of our English visitors had gone to the city for a few days to watch the hockey games, and we thought Mr Rigsby had gone too.'

As soon as Shirley phoned, the hotel manager called the police, who sent out a search team for the scientist. They found him in a cave some hours later, very tired, but safe.

'I've learnt my lesson,' says Bob. 'I agree I was stupid to leave like that without a guide. I never want an experience like that again!'
