The Big Old Tree

There is an old oak tree in my back yard. The tree is big. It has many branches. It has been growing there all my life.

The tree looks healthy. But today I noticed something new. What I can recognize is one of its branches looks different. Something is wrong with it. It hangs lower than the others, and it doesn't have any leaves on it. It looks to me like the branch is dead.

Maybe the branch died because it was damaged. There was a big storm last night. Maybe something fell on it. Or it could have been struck by lightning. But maybe there is another reason. Maybe the tree has a disease. I think a disease could cause the tree branch to look the way it does.

Only an expert can tell if the tree has a disease. An expert will have to look closely at the tree. After this examination, I will know if it has a disease. If it has a disease, then that would be bad. That's because diseases can spread. If the disease spreads, then the whole tree will have a problem. The whole tree will start to die. If the whole tree is dying, then it will have to be cut down. It is too dangerous to have a big, dying tree near the house.

I really like that big old tree. It has been growing there all my life. I hope I won't have to cut it down.

4. Where is the big old tree located?

5. Who can decide if the tree has a problem or not?

6. What does the writer hope in the last paragraph?

Directions:

Read the passage and answer the questions that follow.

Samira had never flown in an airplane by herself. Tomorrow, she would be traveling to spend her summer vacation with her Canadian cousins, Hanna and Yasmine. She had spent these past months asking her parents to allow her to travel alone. Her departure would be the next morning, but now she was feeling very nervous. Before now, she thought flying so far would be fun, but right at this moment, she wasn't so sure. She thought about facts w she had read about Canada: animals running in the forest, thousands of birds flying in the sky, and maple syrup sweeter than honey. Samira was so excited to taste that syrup. At first, she had not believed her cousin Yasmine that syrup comes from maple trees. Samira then looked it up on the Internet, and yes, those maple trees do exist. Until now, her only disappointment was that there would be no snow during the summer.

Tonight, However, Samira felt uncomfortable about the trip. Traveling to Canada had been her idea from the start, but now she did not feel confident. She was supposed to be falling asleep, but she could not stop thinking about how she had planned this trip. She thought about how she and her parents finally agreed that she could travel by herself. Things happened so quickly after that. She bought a ticket, a new raincoat, and gifts for her cousins. Her mother chose some earrings for each cousin, but Samira also selected a football, thinking it would be more fun. As she thought about other games to buy as gifts, Samira fell asleep.

Suddenly, it was morning. All her fears from the night before were gone. There was no time for worrying now. She had to gather her things and go to the airport. Anyway, the worrying was for last night. Today was a whole new story.
