نوع السؤال: اختيارات من متعدد

:Which of the following are "museum" instructions

Follow me ☐

Sitdown ☐

Welcome to school ☐

Don't take photographs ☐

Language Builder

Point out that the word a means “one.” For this reason, we use a with singular words, not with plural words.

A complete explanation of the use of a/an will be presented in the grammar section on page 20.

Language Builder

Explain these vocabulary items:

souvenir = something people buy to remember their visit to a place

toy = something children play with (Point out that the stuffed lion in the picture is one kind of toy.)

check out = an informal expression that means look at (It usually means that the person likes what they see.)

Teaching Tip

Encourage students to use English to ask questions in the classroom. Teach them simple questions, such as How do you say _____ in English? Then when a student asks the question in their first language, you can pretend you don't understand.

Additional Activity

Play a memory game. One student starts by saying I'm at the museum and I see a bicycle (or other object). The next student says: I'm at the museum and I see a bicycle and a telephone. The game continues with each student repeating all of the previous objects in order and adding one more. If a student can't name all the objects, either start the game over or go to the next student.

- Early telephones had no dials, and of course, no key pads. All calls went through the operator. In the U.S., some people were still using phones like this as recently as 1978.
- Most computer keyboards still use a key system based on that of typewriters. It's called QWERTY after the order of the keys in the top line. The first typewriters had keys in alphabetical order. But this allowed people to type too fast and the keys would get stuck. So they changed the order to make people type more slowly.
